A MAPPING OF MAKERS' MOBILITY SCHEMES

Co-funded by the European Union

The present document aims to provide guidance on existing mobility schemes and explore the landscape of mobility for makers, as part of the Makers' eXchange (MAX) project, pilot project on Makers' mobility, co-funded by the European Union, led by the European Creative Hubs Network in partnership with Fab Lab Barcelona, UPTEC & Makery.

Executive Summary

The present document is a guide to mobility for makers, part of Makers' Exchange (MAX) project, a pilot project on makers' mobility. MAX project is co-funded by the European Union and coordinated by the European Creative Hubs Network in collaboration with Fab Lab Barcelona, UPTEC and Makery, actors with wide networks of makers and creatives and significant background, expertise and knowledge of the cultural and creative industries.

MAX project aims to define and test policies and actions supporting the mobility and exchange of experience between the cultural and creative industries, creative hubs, maker-spaces, fab-labs, formal and non-formal learning and skills development systems in a cross-sectoral way. This way, it will make the first steps towards embedding makers' mobility schemes for skills development and inclusion into mainstream CCIs support programmes, policies and ecosystems across Europe.

This guide aims to map the existing mobility schemes and explore the landscape of mobility for makers and also note down the makers' needs in respect with mobility. In this context, a literature review was conducted which included the review of existing guides, reports and policy documents for mobility.

The mapping activity started in February and lasted until September of 2020. However, because of the unexpected Covid-19 outbreak, the research was forced to pause from March to July. During the mapping exercise, the research team reviewed 144 schemes for makers and artists' mobility across Europe. For the purposes of this document, the term maker is being used in a broader sense, including all creative professionals who produce work and projects using technology and/or traditional tools and methods, artists, craftspeople, sculptors and textile designers. This guide is an attempt to map the mobility schemes for makers without claiming to be an exhaustive list.

It is also worth noting, that this guide will feed an interactive tool on the project's website, aiming to improve and consist a useful tool for makers' mobility.

Key findings of the mapping exercise were the following:

- Makers' activities range in a wide spectrum from re-creation of products and new materials to the employment of new technologies, thus a one-size-fits-all approach is not possible to map their needs.
- There is a need to raise awareness on makers' mobility and connect makers with the broader creative and cultural community.
- Both formal and informal maker communities play a significant role in providing and facilitating mobility opportunities.
- The impact of mobility schemes can be measured by combining a mix of metrics.
- There is a need to include makers as a term in the target group of mobility schemes.
- Although makers often fit the description of the addressed audience, the term maker is not usually included in the open calls.

To conclude with, the present report consists of two parts. Part A aims towards presenting the methodology that was followed and the outcomes of the mapping exercise, as well as the metrics that were used for measuring the impact of mobility schemes addressed to makers. Part B of the report is dedicated in presenting, in a clear and user-friendly way, the mobility funding opportunities that were identified during the research period and focus on the exchange of experience and practices between makers across Europe and its neighbouring countries.

1. Introduction

One of the very first milestones set, vital for the success of the MAX project, was a thorough mapping and scoping of existing and upcoming initiatives, relevant to makers, creative hubs and fab-lab community's mobility programmes. In this way, the consortium could gain important information regarding the environment, in which MAX was to be implemented, as well as acknowledge the rich spectrum of such schemes, since there could be a clear image of the activities taking place in this field.

Taking into consideration and learning from the experience of similar mapping activities, the consortium decided that for MAX's case the mapping process should investigate in depth and analyse every aspect of the mobility schemes that were identified in order to:

- Describe in detail the working methods and financing amounts for each case.
- Examine the involvement of existing European networks.
- Test the feasibility of short, medium- and long-term stays for makers.
- Provide feedback regarding good practice examples and recommendations for further policy making.

This document reflects upon the collective effort made by the consortium to collect, organize and present the data that the mapping exercise identified and is by no means exhaustive, regarding the total amount and capacity of relevant mobility schemes.

1.1 The Consortium

European Creative Hubs Network (ECHN)

<http://www.creativehubs.net>

The European Creative Hubs Network is the coordinator of MAX project. ECHN is a peer-led network with a mission to enhance the creative, economic and social impact of hubs. It is the first network in Europe, specifically tailored to support physical spaces that host and provide services to multiple creative businesses.

Associação de Transferência de Tecnologia da Asprela (UPTEC)

<https://uptec.up.pt/>

UPTEC - Science and Technology Park of University of Porto promotes knowledge sharing between the university and the market, by supporting the creation and development of knowledge-intensive business projects in the arts, sciences and technologies.

Fab Lab Barcelona (IAAC)

<https://fablabbcn.org/>

Fab Lab Barcelona is a research and design laboratory crucial to the Institute of Advanced Architecture of Catalonia. It supports the implementation and development of educational and research programs as well as acting as the global coordination entity for Fab Academy, a digitally distributed educational platform where students develop knowledge about the principles, applications and implications of digital manufacturing technologies.

Digital Art International (ART2M) (MAKERY)

<https://www.makery.info/>

Makery is an online information media & medialab founded by Digital Art International (ART2M) in June 2014. It aims to cover the dynamism of the maker culture and give out information on the creative communities of labs: fablabs, fab city hubs, makerspaces, hackerspaces, medialabs, creative hubs, third places, living labs, biohacklabs, care labs and artlabs.

2. Methodology

The methodological approach followed, combines literature review and desk research through existing platforms and networks, relevant projects and initiatives. Furthermore, two out of the four members of the consortium, Makery and Fab Lab Barcelona, have already implemented mapping actions regarding relevant initiatives in the past, thus providing significant advantages and information through their experience.

The research team broke each mobility scheme, relevant to MAX's objectives and guidelines, down to its key aspects, after providing a short description as well as links and references.

The main points that the research focused on for each programme were:

- the target group
- the addressed sectors (whether the scheme was sector specific or cross-sectoral)
- the working method
- the objective(s) of the scheme
- sources of funding
- financing amounts
- the duration of stay for the makers
- good practices
- the geographical scope of the scheme

The research team reviewed mobility programmes that addressed makers, artists and culture professionals as individuals, in groups or under any form of organizations. This was decided as such in order to create a solid database of mobility schemes, from which the consortium could gain robust data for the design and implementation of MAX's pilot phase.

Before the mapping exercise, the consortium went through a thorough investigation of similar mapping activities. The i-Portunus programme and the insights that it provided through its report <sup>1</sup> consisted an important part of the analysis of mobility schemes, since the main aim of i-Portunus was to trial a mobility scheme in 41 countries for artists and culture professionals active in the Performing or Visual Arts. One of the key differentiating points of MAX's scope of research is the fact that MAX addresses to a very specific group of the creative practitioners, the makers. Makers can be considered (and often are) designers or a new kind of designers working with open, peer-to-peer, distributed and DIY approaches <sup>2</sup>, in the intersection of technology, art, design, science, therefore their needs in terms of mobility are interdependent with their practice.

2.1 MAX Mapping Metrics

One of the key objectives of the MAX project is measuring the impact of mobility schemes, and mapping also contributes to assessing the impact of such schemes. The impact of a mobility scheme can be measured by combining a mix of metrics. For the case of MAX project, the metrics used during the mapping exercise but also the relationship between them and different data points contributed greatly on measuring this aspect.

The following set of metrics can be used as a recommendation for gathering data relating to mobility schemes and their participants, eventually measuring the impact for value creation, inclusion and skills development.

Scope of the scheme:

A mobility scheme that has a greater geographical reach may be considered more inclusive through the presence of a higher number of cultures which may impact the implementation of maker practices in different parts of the world.

The number of participants in a scheme will surely impact its value creation through a greater number of contributing parties. However, a number of locations of varying cultural and societal norms could also result in greater impact.

Length and duration of the scheme:

A scheme which occurs over a greater timeframe has the potential for greater development of skills and knowledge exchange through a longer timeframe of engagement with the subject area, thus producing more outputs.

There are issues, such as environmental impact, associated with this metric, as the length of a scheme could determine the nature and frequency of travel for physical exchanges.

Funding:

The amount of funding in relation to the length of the scheme could be considered a major impact indicator.

The nature of the distribution of funding could also influence the result of the exchange.

Number of participants:

A greater number of participants in the scheme can result in a greater pool of available knowledge and skills that can be disseminated.

The fact that there are more individuals present in a scheme, means that more can develop skills and create value through the knowledge they are able to share and bring back to their own network, institutions and organization.

Background of participants:

Understanding the background of the makers can help measure impact through an appreciation of where they started, and the impact of the scheme in their own lives and practice.

Note: In order to measure this, necessary background research is needed on the participants.

Diversity of participants:

A greater number of cultures can create greater inclusion, value creation and skills development. The same can also apply to the number of different disciplines within a scheme.

Maker and organization network:

This point can be considered as an indirect impact of a scheme, as knowledge and skills that are gained by an individual can be brought back to their host organization for example and shared with others.

Institution characteristics:

The spatial and technical offers in terms of equipment greatly impact the kind of skills that can be developed.

3. The Mapping Exercise

3.1 Who are the Makers?

It is important to say that for the purposes of MAX project, the word maker is used in the broader sense of the term, including but not limited to creatives who produce work and projects using technology and/or traditional tools and methods such as artists, craftspeople, sculptors and textile designers.

Getting to know more about the audience addressed and understanding its needs and characteristics was the first step of the mapping exercise. Makers form a significantly active community in the creative sector with increasingly emerging presence in the fields of economy, business and innovation. Key characteristics of makers is their innovative and creative spirit, but also inventiveness, flexibility and problem-solving. Their philosophy is closely related to DIY<sup>3</sup> practices, collaborative fabrication and experimentation through the use of open-source technologies and STEAM education.<sup>4</sup> Their highly developed manual and fabrication skills is one of the reasons that their work is considered to be in the intersection of applied arts and crafts, design, architecture and engineering.

The Maker Movement<sup>5</sup> phenomenon represents the activity of this community, utilizing raw materials and cutting-edge technology (such as laser-cutting and 3D printing), through creative hubs, spaces and labs, such as: FabLabs, Makerspaces and Hackerspaces. In addition, these spaces provide their members and associates with a global, active and continuously expanding network of peers, such as the FabLab Network<sup>6</sup> etc.

Makers can range from highly educated hobbyists to well-established entrepreneurs and professionals. This fact was also pinpointed by the mapping exercise, where it was noticed that mobility programmes addressed to makers and artists often required a demonstration of the candidate's previous work, as a way of evaluation of the applicants' professional level.

3.2 Do the open calls for makers' mobility programs address individuals or groups?

The majority of mobility schemes identified were addressed towards adult individual makers, artists or cultural professionals that have relevant studies or degrees to the subject of each call or able to demonstrate their craft skills by their work overtime. Organizations (Creative Hubs, FabLabs, etc) and/or groups were addressed less frequently. In these cases, usually small groups of 5 to 6 people by average were eligible to participate in the scheme, otherwise, especially in small scale mobility schemes, it was stated that only a representative of the group would be eligible to actively participate in the scheme. There are also some programmes that are open both to individuals and groups.

Regarding the impact of each scheme, a larger number of participants allows for a greater dissemination of the knowledge and skills acquired, whereas through group participation, collaboration and communication skills within the participants, are enhanced. For the case of makers both aspects work exceptionally well since collaborative work and co-creation is a common practice for makers, even when acting individually.

3.3 Overview of the Mobility Schemes

Geographical Scope

The mapping activity also provided a solid framework regarding the geographical scope in terms of the location and implementation for each one of the schemes. The schemes identified showed that the geographical scope of mobility schemes for makers in Europe is broad enough, something that allows great opportunities for cultural interaction among the participants. Calls more than often address a mix of international audiences, with different backgrounds, offering exchange and mobility opportunities mainly in Central and Northern European Countries. More specifically, the mapping exercise showed that Germany, Austria France and the UK were the main countries of destination for 32% of the calls, followed by Croatia, Finland, Spain and The Netherlands. The least represented countries were Albania, Bulgaria, North Macedonia and Turkey being the main destination for less than 5% of the total calls.

Duration of stay

The duration of stay was also closely investigated since it consists an important aspect for value creation and skills development within a scheme. Our research showed is that the duration of stay varies and had a span ranging from five days (minimum duration identified) to three years (maximum duration identified). In addition, in production-oriented programmes, the duration of stay for participants depended on the programme’s needs, for example festival or final event dates (where a final piece of art, produced during the programme would be presented for example).

Furthermore, there were also certain schemes in which the residency period would be specifically defined upon a mutual agreement between the candidate and the hosting institution, usually depending on each project’s needs.

Funding

Funding for the eligible applicants plays also a crucial part regarding the outcomes of a mobility scheme. All of the schemes included a form of funding for the participating makers or artists, regardless of their scale.

In most of the programmes, funding covers the participant’s travel expenses, which seems to be a standard provision among all of the schemes mapped. In addition, very often the selected participants would get a single reimbursement for the duration of their stay or a monthly “artist grant”. Other than that, depending the organization running the scheme and the grants provided, funding also covered expenses as such: accommodation, food, technical equipment, project execution, production or presentation costs. Almost half of the schemes that the mapping exercise identified were supported by EU programmes such as the Creative Europe Programme, the Erasmus+, Horizon 2020 and the Erasmus for Young Entrepreneurs.

The amount of funding in relation to the length of a scheme could be considered a major indicator relevant to the overall impact that a scheme might have.

AiR programmes

Short-term artistic residencies (AiR <sup>7</sup> programmes) consist an easily accessible and frequently occurring type of mobility, usually lasting from a few weeks up to six months. In most of these cases, residencies aimed at the participants' personal artistic and skills development, through peer collaboration or mentoring.

Most artistic residencies are open to transnational participants; the majority of residencies based in the EU are open to candidates from the EU neighbouring countries, part of the Creative Europe geographical scope, encouraging the intercultural dialogue and exchange through the artistic collaboration.

A common practice for AiR programmes, where the programme was offered to an individual or a small group of candidates, was to include some form of mentorship, or offer regular opportunities for networking with local communities through mutual attendance of workshops, seminars and training courses.

3.4 Objectives of Makers' Mobility Schemes

For makers and traditionally for artists, mobility has a tremendous impact on their craft, education and culture, since it can provide unique opportunities for networking, international collaborations, skills development and intercultural dialogue. Also, mobility opens the work produced in an international audience and helps makers/artists to meet new audiences and expand.

Although, the majority of mobility schemes for makers is production-oriented and it aims to the completion of a project which can be time-pressing, however during their stay at host institutions, the participants are able to develop their proposals and craft, through collaborating and interacting with local communities or fellow peers. Mentorship and guidance by experts, is a common good practice identified that can have a great impact, especially for the case of younger and emerging makers and artists.

Initiatives focused on mobility among maker communities tend to encourage their participants in exploring the boundaries of their craft, raising awareness on DIY culture and open-source practices, through research and co-creation in the fields of art and science. Since there is a need for multi- and inter-disciplinary practices to be reflected in mobility support schemes <sup>8</sup>, makers consist an ideal case for including inter-disciplinary projects or cross-sectoral collaborations. A larger variety of disciplines in a scheme can generate great opportunities on exploring new fields of production based on Research and Development, especially when combined with the different cultural background of each participant.

The attendance and organization of educational activities, such as workshops or summer schools is also a common practice identified among residency programmes. These activities mainly aim to connect local communities with the makers/artists in residence. On the other hand, through these activities, the participants of these schemes get the chance to promote their work and culture, as well as contribute to the development of new models regarding education based on learning by doing methods.

4. Useful platforms for makers mobility

In order to collect relevant and up to date data on mobility, a part of the activities of the mapping exercise focused on identifying platforms and networks that foster such initiatives. The platforms listed below in alphabetical order provide regular updates on mobility opportunities for makers, artists and cultural professionals and contributed significantly in enriching the available information on mobility.

4.1 Mobility Funding Programs

The following programs, listed in alphabetical order, provide funding opportunities that support mobility, cross-border exchange and project realisation. The majority of them support exchanges and actions mainly at the wider European scope, however there also are cases that address a more specific geographical area. Many mobility schemes for makers identified in the mapping, are funded under the following EU framework programmes.

5. Covid-19 Impact on Mobility

The pandemic is undoubtably one of the greatest challenges that the creative sector ever faced, being directly affected by its consequences. Professional creative freelancers seem to be one of the most affected groups by the lockdown measures, since the crisis had a huge impact on the way they had been working until now. The majority of individuals employed in the creative sector faces serious challenges regarding their survival and by extent the survival of the whole sector, which amounted to an average of 3,7% of total employment in 2019 across the EU 27 Member States, employing 7.4 million people, according to Eurostat <sup>9</sup>.

Makers and their communities responded quickly to the crisis and organized their activities accordingly when it was possible. The mapping exercise identified initiatives, where makers shared their knowledge and skills online, while working from home, making efficient use of their time away from Makerspaces and FabLabs. Such an example was found through the activities of SCOPES-DF project of the Fab Foundation, where a series of free online workshops, lessons and seminars dedicated to teaching the fundamentals of digital fabrication was organised. In addition to that, makers also connected with the healthcare sector crafting and providing open-source solutions and medical equipment such as 3D printed medical face shields to healthcare professionals. Such examples were also found during the research period in the emergency activities organized by the Careables platform of Made4You Project.

The present report also identified some of the repercussions that the pandemic had on makers' and artists' mobility, because of the fact that it consisted an emergency situation occurring at the same time period. For this reason, changes directly affecting incoming and outgoing populations, were made regularly according to official state measures and the available clinical data in each country.

During the research it was noticed that some of the mobility schemes, mainly residencies, that were scheduled to take place during or a few months after the lockdown were postponed, others were temporarily cancelled or addressed only local audiences, while some turned digital. In other cases, there were schemes warning that current information provided could change depending the stage of the pandemic, meaning that the research team had to closely observe them in order to keep the information updated and relevant. Among others, emergency funds such as the Culture of Solidarity Fund and initiatives responding to the pandemic implications, such as Distributed Design Platform's Distributed Design Finishing School 2020 that support makers and artists that had been affected by the lockdown were also identified.

Furthermore, the findings of the first of series of surveys<sup>10</sup> conducted by Res Artists in collaboration with London's Global University (UCL), also highlight the impact that Covid-19 had on art residencies. The survey, showed that between the 7th of May and the 1st of June 2020, 54% of planned residencies were cancelled modified, cut short or postponed and that one in 10 art residency operators were forced to close indefinitely.

6. Conclusion

The mapping exercise provided MAX project with important insights and set the basis to examine in-depth mobility for makers. By conducting the research, the consortium managed to get a deeper understanding of the environment in which the mobility pilot of MAX would take place. Furthermore, the mapping activity also highlighted the rich spectrum and diversity of existing mobility funding initiatives that makers, artists and cultural professionals have the chance to participate in.

However, it is also important to mention that the research also showed that makers are offered less opportunities for exchange directly addressed to their needs, compared to other artistic practices. The fact that there is still not a clear and commonly accepted definition of what a maker is, makes the situation even more complicated regarding the design and implementation of such initiatives.

The following part of this report aims to present the collaborative attempt of the consortium to map mobility schemes that provide makers with opportunities for participation. The schemes that are presented, mainly emphasize on the exchange of experience and practices between makers and/or organisations across Europe and its neighbouring countries. Those initiatives are organized in three different categories based on the participation of makers:

1. For Makers: Mobility schemes that makers consist their core target audience.

2. Maker Inclusive: Mobility schemes that makers can participate in, alongside a variety of participants.

3. Including All Artistic Practices: Mobility schemes that makers can participate in, as long as they fit the selection criteria, since these initiatives do not exclude any artistic practice.

To conclude with, the next step for MAX project directly related to the mapping exercise is the creation of an online and interactive database, which will host the mobility initiatives mapped. In addition, thanks to the interactive nature of this tool, makers will have the opportunity to enrich this database by adding their own contributions regarding upcoming mobility opportunities, while also being able to search for and identify those programmes that best suit their needs. This way the whole project would contribute to establishing stronger connections between makers and the broader creative community.

1. For Makers

The following schemes focus mainly on the mobility and knowledge exchange among the maker community. Makers, hackers, craftspeople and creative hub members consist their core target audience, while cross-collaboration between the participants, research, training and prototyping are their main topics.

Through participating in this kind of mobility schemes, tailored specifically according their needs, the participants can benefit significantly, further developing their craft, network and contribute to the expansion of their dynamic-growing community through participatory exploration.

3N / AND - Abandon Normal Devices Fair

Drugo more

<http://drugo-more.hr/en/open-call-3n/>

Inspired by the nineteenth-century concept of the World’s Fair, conceived as an opportunity for inventors and engineers to unveil their inventions and discoveries, 3N / AND Fair combines some unusual exhibits and weird ideas that serve as a catalyst for new approaches in the use of technology.

Hybrid Lab Network

<https://hybrid.i3s.up.pt/hybrid-labs/biohacking-academy-biohacking-to-outreach/>

Hybrid Lab Network (HYBRID) is an exploratory project to promote innovation and good practices for Higher Education bridging areas of Art, Science, Technology/Engineering and Humanities, and fostering knowledge sharing and training.

* Project’s kick off was just before lockdown. Similar initiatives of HYBRID took place online because of Covid regulations.

BioFriction Residency Programme

BioFriction

<https://biofriction.org/news/open-call-biofriction/>

BioFriction is a research project led by Hangar in collaboration with Bioart Society, Cultivamos Cultura, and Kersnikova Institute with the goal of generating and facilitating spaces for exchange where artists, curators, theoreticians and different social collectives, such as activists and educational projects, can collaborate in transdisciplinary experimental proposals. The projects offer practical alternatives to existing problems in contemporary Europe, such as the rise of essentialist discourses.

| What?            | The residencies refer to the combination of biology, biotech and arts as surfaces of friction, with particular attention to the emancipatory potential of biotechnology through interfaces in the context of artistic practices. The time-periods will depend on the needs of the project as well as the place where they are carried out (Hangar, Bioart Society, Cultivamos Cultura or Kersnikova Institute). The residency might be split in two phases if the proposed project requires a long-term work on biological materials. |

British Council’s 2018 Helsinki Design Residency

The British Council, in partnership with the Helsinki International Artist Programme (HIAP) and Helsinki Design Week (HDW) and Aalto University

<https://design.britishcouncil.org/blog/2018/mar/27/helsinki-design-residency-open-call-2018/>

The Helsinki Design Residency, first established in 2012 offers an opportunity for practitioners to explore and reflect on the evolving life and context of Helsinki as a Nordic capital. The residency focuses on stimulating new research and is open to a broad range of UK-based practitioners at the intersection of art, design and architecture, encouraging speculative and critical thinking.

Good Practices

Mutual learning experience both for visiting and hosting hubs.

Short mobility schemes (4-5 days) that facilitate immediate communication, flexible scheduling and interconnectivity.

Team-centered applications that focus on collaboration.

A selection of the best five prototypes from both rounds of the P2P scheme will be presented during the closing conference of the project in the first half of 2021.

Creative Museum Project’s Maker in Residence Programme

Creative Museum Projects/ Making Museum

<http://creative-museum.net/c/makers-in-residence/>

The Creative Museum Project (and its follow-up, Making Museum) seek to explore and provide information on the connections between cultural organizations and their communities by capitalizing on the emergence of new and democratizing digital technologies. Seeking to extend the language of engagement through the medium of accessible, customizable, and personal digital experiences, the projects see museums as dynamic learning environments in which staff and visitors can use accessible digital tools to explore collections in new and creative ways.

| What?             | Reconsidering the strategies of urban leisure in city centres. The project reflects around the redevelopment of empty shops through the implementation of strategies that no longer solely consider the city as a place of consumption. Part of the residency includes small scale interventions, prototypes and experimentation. To support this, the organizers provide a living lab condition in existing but empty buildings and shops in the city centre. |

| Who is it for?   | Design collectives, studios and individual designers who live in Scotland and are eligible to work in the UK.                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Where?           | Dundee, UK                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| What?            | The residency provided designers with time and space with specialist fabricators to test new ideas, improvise with materials and experiment with different production techniques.                                                                                                                                             |

ECHN Project’s P2P scheme
European Creative Hubs Network Project
(2016-2018)

<http://creativehubs.net/>

The European Creative Hubs Network was a two-year project co-funded by the European Union and led by the British Council in collaboration with Bios, Addict, Betahaus, Kulturni Kod/ Nova Iskra, Creative Edinburgh, Factoria Cultural and the European Bussiness and Innovation Network. The project aimed to boost significantly the ecosystem that currently supports creative and culture sectors across Europe. It is a peer-led network with a mission to enhance the creative, economic and social impact of hubs.

Made@EU Project’s Residencies and Workshops

Made@EU

<https://madeat.eu>

Made@EU is a project co-funded by the European Union that aims to bridge the digital divide that currently hinders the widespread use of digital fabrication knowledge and technologies in the European cultural and creative sectors, especially in the fields of design, arts and crafts.

| Good Practices | The development of digital fabrication tools has been described as the third industrial revolution in as much as it is expected to radically change the production and distribution status quo, and strongly influence society as a whole, from a cultural, social and economic platform. |

MADE IN Residencies and Workshops

MADE IN Platform

<https://www.madein-platform.com/>

MADE IN is a research, design and heritage platform that proposes new collaborative practices and knowledge exchange between the traditional craftspeople and contemporary designers. It engages craftspeople, designers, researchers, curators and theoreticians on a quest to pose relevant questions about the topics of heritage and production in today’s society through research and archiving of local crafts, conducting workshops and residencies and promoting ideas through a travelling exhibition.

Re-FREAM

STARTS Programme

<http://www.re-fream.eu/>

STARTS is an initiative of the European Commision under the Horizon 2020 Research and Innovation programme. Re-FREAM is a collaborative research project where selected artists and designers team up with a community of scientists to rethink the manufacturing process of the fashion industry. Over a nine-month period, these hybrid teams will embark on a co-research and co-creation journey guided by a specific Art/Tech collaboration methodology.

| What?             | Selected artists and technologists commit during a nine-month period (part face-to-face in the hubs, and part online) to undergo a co-research and co-creation process together by using the Re-FREAM Art/Tech Collaboration Methodology on specific technology challenges. Training and co-design with environmental and manufacturing experts will thus expand the vision of the hubs beyond prototype and small-scale manufacturing towards a holistic perspective for a sustainable future. |

STARTS Residencies

Vertigo STARTS

<https://vertigo.starts.eu>

STARTS is an initiative of the European Commision under the Horizon 2020 Research and Innovation programme. The STARTS Residencies Program organizes collaborations between artists and tech projects. Vertigo is funded under the H2020 European STARTS initiative, innovation at the nexus of Science Technology, and the ARTS. STARTS promotes the arts as catalysts for efficient conversion of science and technology knowledge into products, services, and processes. To achieve this objective, Vertigo is organizing and funding artist residencies within Tech projects.

Vulca Tour/Vulca Seminars*Vulca - European Programme<https://vulca.eu/>

Vulca is a non-profit organization with the mission to bring citizens' ideas to EU policy makers using a bottom-up approach. They believe that mobility brings the Maker and Hacker community together and enables easier conduction of distributed projects, which would help achieve Sustainable Development Goals.

| Good Practices    | Development of plans dedicated to reducing future economic, environmental and social disparities, strengthening economic competitiveness, increasing the quality of education and reducing poverty.                                                |

2. Maker Inclusive

The following schemes have a greater span in their target audience and subjects, including a variety of sectors of the creative industries. Makers themselves might not consist their core audience but their participation is not excluded by any means. Being so closely related with the field of applied arts they have the opportunity to participate in these schemes, as long as they fit the selection criteria, as designers, architects, visual artists and creators, depending their education and experience.

These exchange programmes provide makers with the chance to interact and develop their skillset alongside artists that operate in closely related fields. Production or training residencies play a significant role, especially in cases where the project to be implemented is proposed by the applicants themselves, meaning that they can easily adjust it, matching their craft and skills.

AiR - Artist in Residence
Niederösterreic

The federal state of Lower Austria

<https://www.air-noe.at/en/application/incoming>

The AiR programme offers living and working spaces for artists in Krems an der Donau for a period of one to three months. The basic prerequisite for funding is a degree in a field of art (university level). If the applicant does not have a university degree, proof of equivalent ability must be provided through his or her artistic career. Applicants must demonstrate regular artistic activity in the proposed areas of funding.

| What?             | Chosen residents will have the opportunity to conduct a field study, based on which they will create their own research/ artistic notes.                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Objectives        | The aim of the residency is to network Polish, German and Georgian artistic environments and institutions and map how they reflected pan-European ideas, i.e. modernism. What was their status in the past and what is today, and how have changes in time and space (East / West) influenced modernism and its perception. |

Beyond Matter Residencies

Beyond Matter Project

<https://zkm.de/en/open-call-beyond-matter-residency>

These residencies are conceived within the framework of the long-term project Beyond Matter. Fellows are expected to develop an artistic production or a theoretical concept to consider not only the multivalent applications of the latest representational (VR) systems, but also various ways to expand them.

| What?             | The Bibliothek Andreas Züst is especially seeking projects that deal with the library as a whole or one of its sub-areas. The Studio Residency Stipend program is to be considered in the tradition of libraries as places of knowledge in the sense of diversity. |
| Objectives        | The residency should entail research about what constitutes the fabric of our culture and also what goes beyond it.                                                                                                                                                |
| Source of funding | Self-funded                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Financing amounts | Travel costs, accommodation and use of the studio are covered.                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

A separate request can be made for an additional subsidy for living costs of up to CHF 250 per week (~235 €).

Artistic production costs must be covered privately.

LABOR is an ephemeral urban laboratory to explore sustainable forms of our society. It wishes to meet the challenges of today's society by dealing with a major theme: the city of tomorrow. Bivouac is an exhibition that takes the shape of an artistic immersion in the 50'000 m<sup>2</sup> of La Rasude, a central district totally unknown to the population of Lausanne.

* Due to the coronavirus pandemic, the first Bivouac call was postponed, and the project will take place with new dates in Spring 2021.

| What?            | Residencies will take place bringing together artists, architects, specialists and students. This on-site work process is essential as it allows the production of a true collective intelligence. Guests will be invited to create works or projects based on the scale of the building, which the public will then be able to discover. Some will last the entire duration of the exhibitions; others will remain until the last stage of LABOR. |

| What?            | Converging Territories was a pilot-project for architects' mobility in Europe. In the framework of a residence, the applicants were invited to develop proposals, linked to a specific territorial or spatial situation, located in one of the three cities involved: Dublin, Paris and Prague. Project organizers provided applicants with issues linked to specific territories or spaces, and applicants are free to interpret them. However, their proposals should address current stakes of European cities: urban sprawl, architectural creation in historical settings, reuse of service buildings, migration, transformation of large suburban areas. |

Generation A=Algorithm, AI
Residency Programme

Goethe Institut

<https://www.goethe.de/prj/one/en/gea/for/res.html#i6863078>

In 2020 and 2021, the Goethe-Institut will implement the large-scale project “Generation A=Algorithm”, in which technical developments in the field of artificial intelligence will be highlighted and at the same time critically reflected upon. As part of the project “Generation A=Algorithm”, thirteen residencies in eleven European countries for young artists from Europe are being announced.

| What?            | Between April and September 2019, i-Portunus issued three Calls for Applications, providing support for international mobilities of artists active in the fields of the performing or visual arts and residing in a Creative Europe country. The destination of the mobility had to be a Creative Europe country. |
| Type of activity | Mobility support programme                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Sectors          | Visual arts, Performing arts                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Objectives       | These mobilities required a specific and well-defined objective, such as to develop an international collaboration, to engage in a production-oriented residency or in professional development in the destination country. To apply, one should organize a project with a host institution or partner.           |

Kaunas AiR

CreArt Network

<https://creat2-eu.org/open-calls/creat-air-in-kaunas-lithuania-spring-2019>

Kaunas Artist-in-Residence program is an initiative of CreArt, launched in 2014. CreArt Kaunas partners, PE “Artkomas”, have a large experience of organizing visual arts projects, and short-term residencies in their city as well as other cities and towns of Lithuania. With their own focus on painting, “Artkomas” co-operates with experts of other visual arts fields.

| What?          | Preference is given to works with a wide variety and diversity. There is no age limitation, yet it is necessary to have a degree in a field of art. If the applicant does not have a university degree, proof of equivalent ability must be provided through his or her artistic career. Kaunas will provide an assistant to help with settling in the city and organize introduction to the local artist scene. The artists will have open days for visitors. In addition, Kaunas will make a final public presentation of the artworks created during the residency (a group exhibition of the 4 artists). |

The exhibition will be displayed in Kaunas, in co-operation with a local continuous art project. Finally one of the artworks will remain in Kaunas city.

16. Mobility Fund

Roberto Cimetta Fund

<https://www.cimettafund.org/article/index/rubrique/2/lang/en/fm/1>

The Roberto Cimetta Fund, is an international non-profit organization created in 1999 to respond rapidly and directly to individual artists and cultural managers wishing to travel in order to develop contemporary artistic cooperation projects in the Euro-Arab geographical zone and beyond. It is the Mobility Fund for artists and cultural operators in Europe, the Arab world and the Middle East. The Fund acts as an intermediary, establishing partnerships with public or private funders for the travel grants programme.

| What?            | The residency team connects the interests of the residents with ZK/U's programme and informs them about events and discourses taking place elsewhere in Berlin. The residents can participate in ZK/U's public programme ranging from events, to exhibitions, workshops and conferences that are organized by ZK/U's project team. ZK/U is a collaborative, socially engaged and locally involved art platform. They are therefore particularly interested in plans that create space for encounters and exchanges between citizens from different backgrounds and that question the urban infrastructure and public space. ZK/U is open to plans that are conceptual, interventionist and contextual. |

| Objectives        | Berlin remains undiminished as a city of great attraction. The city is known for its turbulent history, highly developed cultural life, liberal lifestyle, interesting museums, the Berlin Biennale, Berlin Art Week and contemporary art institutions. The programme aims to explore urban developments than in a city that has changed so radically in recent decades. |

Regeneration: New Institutional Practices

Het Nieuwe Instituut

<https://research-development.hetnieuweinstituut.nl/en/fellows/regeneration-open-call-new-institutions>

Through its annual Fellowship programme, Het Nieuwe Instituut’s Research Department acknowledges and gives visibility to two research projects offering departures from established modes of thinking.

* In case the timeline is not feasible due to the pandemic, the fellowship may be postponed or the proposal may need to be adapted to the current conditions.

| What?            | The Skaftfell residencies offer time and space for independent research, reflection, and experimentation. Artists are encouraged to use their stay for in-depth inquiries into their work processes and conceptual interests, to use the nature of the fjord as a source of energy and inspiration, to work at the interface of art and life, to share thoughts with other artists, and to embrace the idea of a “slow residency” that is embedded in a small but vibrant rural community. |

| What?            | Each year, TaDA offers a work stay in Switzerland to six to eight national and international artists. As programme partners, how, certain textile and design companies in Eastern Switzerland make their know-how and technology available to the artists, thus giving the residents an opportunity to do practical and artistic work and carry out applied research. |

3. Including All Artistic Practices

The following schemes do not exclude any artistic media, meaning that makers can have the opportunity to participate as long as they fit the selection criteria. A common practice for those schemes is the fact that they often include transdisciplinary collaborations between artists or between artists and scientists. Some of them can be ideal for makers, since cross-disciplinary practices and collaborations between the arts and science are very common among their projects.

Art, Science and Society Residency Programme

IMERA Institut Méditerranéen de Recherche Avancée / Institute for Advanced Study

<https://candidatures-imeram.univ-amu.fr/en/art-science-and-society-programme-2021-2022-mucemimera-residence-application-and-residency>

Each year, this residency programme hosts about thirty artists and scientists from all disciplines. The residencies are intended for artists and scientists submitting projects whose development clearly requires collaborations between art and science.

ART+MAGIC Residency

bb15 Space for Contemporary Art

<http://bb15.at/open-call/>

For this open call, the Austrian contemporary art space bb15 is seeking original project proposals that trigger mental associations and subliminal experiences at the junction of art, ritual and magic.

| What?             | The residency programme focuses on and explores the interplay between contemporary visual art and auditory practices, in relation to the themes of artistic expression and magic. Applicants propose a convincing potential residency outcome (installation, object making, performance, etc.).  |
| Sectors           | All artistic practices                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Objectives        | During their stay at bb15, the selected artists will be expected to push forward and bring further their proposal into a work that will be presented to the public at the end of the residency. It is highly desirable that the invited artists create specific and new works during their stay. |

International Itinerant Residency

<http://plattformplus.com/convocatoria.html>

VeículoSUR is a residency that travels internationally and serves the purpose of artistic networking. It promotes exchange and encounters between artists and cultural practitioners. It facilitates synergies between professional and emerging artists who explore different forms of artistic practice and production through dialogue, collaboration and exchange.

| Who is it for?   | Individual artists and cultural professionals from Uruguay (national level), Chile (national level), Brazil (Sao Paulo/State), France (national level), Germany (Munich) Finland (national level).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Where?           | The residency takes shape in a group of artists who move, together, in a journey from south to north: Uruguay, Chile, Brazil, France, Germany, and Finland.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| What?            | The residency proposes displacement as a format, both in terms of artistic creation and ideological mobility, providing spaces for training, production, artistic actions, and debate on personal and collective emergencies. In each one of the cities participating, there will be specific programming, from the transversal theme, crossing, provoking and encouraging reflections and displacements, in dialogue with the context of each country. |
| Type of activity | Moving residency and exchange programme.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

LINZ FMR – Art in Digital Contexts and Public Spaces

<https://linzfmr.at/hello-world-2/>

LINZ FMR – Art in Digital Contexts and Public Spaces is a biennial festival and format for artistic processes and positions that reflects the ephemeral nature of the digital and connected present. The ever-advancing digitalization of everyday life implies an intense overlapping and layering of familiar physical, but also finely interwoven digital spaces.

Nordic-Baltic Mobility Programme for Culture

Nordic Culture Point

<https://www.nordiskkulturkontakt.org/en/grants/about-the-grant-programmes/mobility-funding/>

The Nordic-Baltic Mobility Programme for Culture is intended for the travel and/or stay of professional artists or cultural workers within Nordic and/or Baltic countries.

| Who is it for?    | Individual artists, cultural workers or groups of up to 6 persons from Nordic and/or Baltic Countries.                                                                                                                  |
| Where?            | DenmarkEstoniaFinlandFaroe IslandsGreenlandIcelandLatviaLithuaniaNorwaySwedenÅland Islands                                                                                      |
| What?             | The mobility fund provides access to contacts, skills and knowledge from different parts of the region. The Nordic-Baltic Mobility Programme comprises three forms of funding: mobility, network and residence funding. |
| Type of activity  | Mobility Fund                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Objectives        | To strengthen artistic and cultural cooperation in the Nordic region and Baltic states.                                                                                                                                 |

| Financing amounts | The size of the fund is based on a fixed travel cost and/or fixed compensation per day, which is calculated based on the duration and destination of the stay.                                                                                                                                        |
| Duration of stay  | The fund covers up to 10 days (The stay may exceed ten days, but the mobility funding will not cover it).                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Good Practices    | The results show that mobility is beneficial not only for its own sake, but also for the professional development of the recipients and the entire artistic or cultural field that they represent. Mobility funding is perceived as valuable amongst professional artists and cultural practitioners. |

Post-lockdown residencies

Cité Internationale des Arts Paris and Carasso Foundation

<https://www.citedesartsparis.net/en/2020-program-daniel-and-nina-carasso-foundation-cite-internationale-des-arts>

The arts and cultural sector have been particularly affected by the consequences of the Covid-19 health crisis and many artists and cultural professionals have lost income as a result of their events and projects either being cancelled or postponed. In response to this context and in order to provide support to artists and cultural professionals from the French arts and culture scene, the Cité Internationale des arts has joined forces with the Carasso Foundation to create a new residency programme.

| Who is it for?   | Individual artists and cultural professionals currently residing in France, irrespective of their nationality, as long as they can justify a minimum period of activity of at least 5 years.                                                                                                                                              |
| Where?           | Paris, France                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| What?            | This residency programme comes in answer to the pressing need of artists and cultural professionals whose very survival is in jeopardy in these uncertain times. It is also a way of getting to grips with a joint reflection about the future of artists’ residencies and, more widely, on how to increase the visibility of creativity. |
| Type of activity | Emergency mobility support programme due to Covid-19.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

| Who is it for?   | Individuals, culture professionals and artists from non-profit organizations, organizations and public institutions.                                                                                                                                                           |
| Where?           | Depends on each Tandem programme.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| What?            | Within each Tandem programme, participants form cross-national partnerships of two, aka tandems. These Tandem partners organize working visits to each other's cities or regions and develop a joint pilot project which serves as a space for mutual learning and engagement. |
| Type of activity | Mobility, Training                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Sectors          | Arts and Culture, Transdisciplinary practices                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| Objectives       | The programme acts on different levels, offering professional development to individuals, as well as supporting organizational change processes and creating a space to experiment with innovative ideas.                                                                      |

|                   |                                                                                                                                        |
|-------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Source of funding | Each programme round is implemented with regional partners and supported by various funders.                                           |
| Financing amounts | Depends on the programme.                                                                                                              |
| Duration of stay  | Depends on the programme.                                                                                                              |
| Good Practices    | Tandem's vision is to see networks of creative communities emerge from the programme, and support the impact of their ongoing efforts. |

| Who is it for?    | Individual artists and scientists at an international level.                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| Where?            | Espoo, Finland                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| What?             | This residency gives to two artists and a scientist an opportunity to realize artistic work in a fully equipped laboratory dedicated to bioart and meet the researchers and doctoral students of Aalto University and the Department of Art in the Aalto Otaniemi Campus. |
| Type of activity  | Residency                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Sectors           | Arts and science                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| Objectives        | Artistic work will reflect critically upon technical manipulation and exploitation of living systems, biological beings, other species, and/or the biosphere at large. The aim is to create artworks in relation to the explored themes.                                  |
| Source of funding | Co-funded by the Creative Europe Programme.                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

| Financing amounts | 5.000€ covering living costs during the residence and some of the costs of production and presentation.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| Duration of stay  | 1 month                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| Good Practices    | During the residency the university will organize resident artist and scientist-led workshops for high school students. The artists and scientist in residence will plan and organize these workshops together with Junior personnel. In the final presentation the works by the artist and scientist collaborations as well as the outcomes of STEAM workshops will be showcased. |

21. Trust Me, I'm an Artist

Waag Society, Brighton and Sussex Medical School, The Arts Catalyst, Ciant, Kapelica Gallery, Medical Museion, Capsula and Leonardo/Olats

<http://trustmeimanartist.eu>

Trust Me, I'm an Artist was a project co-funded by the European Union and lead by Waag Society in collaboration with Brighton and Sussex Medical School, The Arts Catalyst, Ciant, Kapelica Gallery, Medical Museion, Capsula and Leonardo/Olats, that investigated how artists and cultural institutions can best engage with biotechnology and biomedicine in order to drive innovation in artistic production, ways of presenting artworks, and developing new audiences in Europe.
